SURVEY

Introduction :

Our request to have blue coloured dogs acknowledged on our standard has been rejected by the ANKC due to their concerns that this dilution of the black colour has produced health problems in other breeds. The NTTC wishes to survey owners and/or breeders of blue dogs to build as correct a background as possible of the health of any blue dogs to date.

Dilution colours exist in the breed and as we are still developing why should we omit quality dogs based on colour with absolutely no evidence to show that there is a health concern with the dogs that are dilutes of already accepted colours.

Hearing loss and Alopecia are linked to the dilution gene in some breeds but not all breeds with the dilution gene are affected by health problems associated with these defective genes.

Examples - Weimaraners are all dilutes and they don't have a dilution gene hijacker that affects their health. Whippets, Greyhounds and Italian Greyhounds all carry the dilution gene without health issues associated with the resulting colours.

Many Terriers breeds are well established with dilute colours, American Staffordshire Bull Terriers, Staffordshire Bull Terriers, etc. None of which have any associated dilution linked health concerns.

The dilute gene (blue & isabella) are not the same as the merle gene or grey collie syndrome genes which are associated with deafness.

Problems may occur when breeding blue to blue and this is not condoned by the Council on any level - our major concern is to breed healthy Tenterfield Terriers where colour is of the least importance and where soundness, conformation and temperament are a priority.

We are conducting a survey of Tenterfield Terrier owners that have had the dilute colour blue in their lines.
